EXECUTIVE PROGRAM IN COUNTER-TERRORISM
Los Angeles, August 5 - 10

ABOUT: The University of Southern California Executive Program in Counter-Terrorism is designed to challenge international counter-terrorism leaders and enhance their analysis, coordination and response capabilities to the evolving terrorism threat.

WHO SHOULD APPLY: The program is structured specifically for public sector professionals and policymakers, and employs an interdisciplinary academic and experiential learning environment.

WHAT YOU WILL LEARN: Participants will strengthen their cross-functional skills through immersion in key issues and best practices presented by world-class research and public policy analysts in counter-terrorism. In addition, the program fosters academic, professional and personal development amidst a diverse group of peers from across the country and around the world.

ABOUT CREATE
Established in 2004, CREATE is an interdisciplinary national research center based at the University of Southern California jointly housed in the Sol Price School of Public Policy and the Viterbi School of Engineering. The Center is focused on risk and economic analysis of terrorism and disasters.

APPLICATIONS
Applications are due no later than July 5, 2018. The online application process requires the submission of a statement of professional interest and a letter of endorsement from the candidate’s employer. Early application is strongly encouraged as space is extremely limited.

PROGRAM FEE
The program fee for the six day course is $4000. This covers tuition, materials, accommodation and meals (breakfast, lunch and two dinners). For L.A. area residents not requiring lodging the fee is $3500. U.S. military veterans receive a $500 discount. For more information visit our website.
